Japan Times:

K. Y. Yin's Death Deals "A Blow To Economy Of Taiwan"

Tokyo, Feb. 6 (CNA) The death of K. Y. Yin was described in a Japan Times article today as "a blow to the economy of Taiwan." American businessman Joseph Z. Reday, who contributes a regular column on economic affairs to the Japan Times, wrote a two column contribute to Yin under the headline "Yin's Death Deals Blow To Economy of Taiwan." Reday said:

"This article is a eulogy to a very fine man and a superbly competent government official whose untimely death in Taipei last week is going to leave a gaping hole in the economic affairs of Free China, and for that matter the whole Far East.

"He was K. Y. Yin, who almost single-handedly converted Taiwan from a little underdeveloped island to what next to Japan is the strongest and most diversified industrial and commercial economy in the Orient. He was also my good friend and I shall miss him.

"K. Y. Yin had often been called the Erhard of China, in comparison with the Economics Minister of West Germany who performed miracles there. While Erhard had a bigger and much better publicized job in a bigger country, K. Y. Yin had in many ways a tougher one.

"His main effect on trade and money controls was to remove as many of them as he could and to make the remainder as simple as they could be made. His brochure on how to handle currency controls to do a minimum of damage to an economy should be required reading in all finance ministries.

"The task of the Chinese Government now is not to try to find another K. Y. Yin. It probably can not be done, for the hard driving executive type with a habit of making
