Double Sonnets Rainbow Life

A youngster on East Coast held high his head,
Detest'd the power, meanwhile loved fine truth,
Indulged in balm of books while moonfaced red.
Tis luxury, when he is long in tooth:
No metaphysics, theology, nay.
Did keep the prudent thoughts outgrown in dreams.
Did prove to understand the reason way.
He sought in solitude for mateship teams.
The perfect landscapes looked so perfect still;
Pursued, with whom he went together on?
On sanguinary frost and snow there fill
With countless brains and livers mir'd at dawn.
Wild sky and sod boil like a rotten fish,
When darkness wanders round with ending wish.

Thanks to the rich world, let him hold the pass,
Study the cosmos yet forget his age.
To need not that assumption, said Laplace.
An Occam's razor shaves the ghost and mage.
Near to the sunlight, Popper took a probe:
The falsifiability's the key,
To tear the benight'd Superstition's robe.
To know, to search, if wrong correct per ce.
Accomplish a trillion sperms his ego.
O for one, that with this life, he's content!
Swallows on hall and willows dry follow.
The dim night he loves stretches, never spent,
Where wipes of graceful rainbow creep up now.
The fairlands nowhere exist, say, for thou.
