EECS IGP

The Fourth Year of Doctoral Program

"I was always fascinated with electronics and semiconductor engineering and wanted to dive deeper into this area, so I decided to go for higher studies. During my undergraduate, I worked on electronic and embedded projects which made me realize that this field is more interesting so I decided to do a Master's in IC designing. In the field of electronics and technology, Taiwan is the best and in the year 2020, I got the opportunity to get admission to the EECS IGP department at NYCU. Right now I am a part of the Mixed-Signal and Power IC lab at NYCU. In the past two years, I learned a lot related to IC designing, and also I met numerous international students at NYCU, which gave me a chance to learn about their cultures, broaden my perspective, and become a better version of myself. Finally, I'd like to say that the experience has given me more than I expected, and I'm grateful to be a part of NYCU."

Campus Report

An Upgrade of General Education?

How does liberal arts education differ from conventional general education? Director Young used eating at a buffet as an example, explaining that the conventional general education offered in National Chiao Tung University used to include various foreign language courses, and all courses were organized separately, which can be likened to numerous restaurants that are independent of each other. By contrast, NYCU Liberal Arts College functions like an all-you-can-eat buffet, where all the delicious foods have been placed under one roof, which is most convenient for customers to choose and facilitates easier quality control.

As a departure from the conventional notion that general education is secondary to disciplinary education, NYCU advocates liberal arts education that stresses the importance of learning by doing in life. By integrating research and internship education as well as community and peer education, the liberal arts education of NYCU encourages students to engage in self-directed learning, participate in the management of diverse and interdisciplinary communities, organize interest-oriented activities, learn to be a team player, and create an environment conducive to self-learning.
